Additional Leadership Moves Made to Continue Company's Growth*

Herndon, Va. – CVW Event Productions (CVW) today announced that the company's ownership, while remaining in-house, will be changing hands after 40 years of operation. The company's founder, Kirby Whyte has sold controlling interest in CVW to Matthew Eidemiller who will serve as the company's owner and president. Eidemiller has been at CVW since 2007 and most recently served in the role of vice president of production. Whyte will remain a part of the organization as its founder but will step away from day-to-day operations. Changes are effective immediately and terms of the deal were not disclosed.

"I am so thankful to Kirby for this amazing opportunity and the guidance he has provided over the years," said new President and Owner Matt Eidemiller. "He built a special company that prides itself on relationships, client services and its commitment to employees. With this foundation, we are poised to grow to even higher levels in the months and years ahead."

In addition, Jason Vaughn has been promoted from director of business development to vice president of business development and Samantha Wolbert will serve as managing director of client services. Previously Wolbert was the company's client services manager.

An impressive list of recent clients includes the John F. Kennedy Center, TAPS, Ford, the Elizabeth Dole Foundation, the Biden Cancer Summit, the Atlantic Council and news personality Katie Couric's 2021 book tour.

Jason Vaughn added, "This is an exciting time for our business and our industry. We managed to excel during the pandemic with the creation of hybrid virtual and in-person event production. Now, as normalcy begins to return in 2022, we are poised to create the perfect event of any kind for organizations of all sizes. We anticipate continued growth and are energized for this new phase in the company's existence."
